

U.S. Department of the Interior
Bureau of Land Management

Land Surveyor

Make a Career of It!

Want to make your mark on the land? Consider a career as a land surveyor!

Surveyors bring order to the geography of the physical world. From Alaska to Florida and everywhere in between, Bureau of Land Management (BLM) surveyors mark, define, and document public land boundaries. Surveyors are well-known for working from “boots to suits.” They’re comfortable surveying in remote field locations, and equally at home in the office using state-of-the-art technology to produce plans, maps, files, and databases.

Surveyors provide critical information to help land managers make sound land use decisions, and to ensure the accuracy of resource development boundaries and acreage. No physical improvement, development project, or transfer of resources on public lands can occur without the work of BLM land surveyors.

Interested? Please visit www.opm.gov/qualifications

U.S. Department of the Interior
Bureau of Land Management

Land Surveyor

Make a Career of It!

blm.gov/careers