Pair of bull caribou in the NPR-A

Amount Expended: $0

The Arctic District Office (RDO) issues authorizations to permitted guides for special recreation permits (SRP) that offer hunting opportunities to small groups for species such as caribou, moose, and grizzly bear. Often, these groups will operate out of spike camps for the length of their guided hunt, which is typically a week or less.

Raft pulled out of river in the NPR-A

Amount Expended: $0

Hunting isn't the only reason people visit lands managed by RDO. The RDO also processes SRP authorizations for guided rafting, hiking, and wildlife viewing tours. These trips often require overnight camping at multiple locations along the route, typically for no more than two nights at each spot.

Recreation fee dollars are an investment in outdoor recreation. Current and future generations benefit as 100% of the funds collected are reinvested in the facilities and services that visitors enjoy, use, and value.
